

The Right Hand Starter Kit

The systems, scripts, 30-day plan, and real costs of your first hire

Most delegation fails at the handoff. This kit fixes the handoff: what to give away, the words to use, and the systems that keep it running.

4 SYSTEMS

30-DAY PLAN

YOUR WEEK 1

Hiring fails at the handoff, not the search. Hand a person a job title and you get questions for a month. Hand them a system and they run. This kit is the system side: four tools our operators start with, a 30-day plan that sequences your first handoffs, what the hire should cost, the job posting to run, and how to treat the person in their first 90 days. Your test result told you how many hours are on the table. This kit is how you collect them.

YOUR WEEK 1

Start with the two biggest numbers from your test

Open your test result. Take the two categories with the most hours; for most founders that is email and scheduling, then CRM and follow-ups. Write them here. These two handoffs are your entire week 1. Nothing else moves until these two run without you.

Handoff 1 (biggest number):

Handoff 2:

Recoverable hours from my test:

Run the handoff script below with each one, then hold the line for seven days. The fastest way to fail is handing off five things at once and checking on all of them daily.

THE HANDOFF SCRIPT

The conversation that makes it stick

Use these words with your Right Hand, a VA, or anyone on your team:

"I've mapped my week and this task, [TASK], is now yours. Here's what 'done' looks like: [OUTCOME, NOT METHOD]. You own it end to end. The decision I'm handing you: [E.G. REFUNDS UNDER $100]. Friday, bring me one question: what did you decide?"

Three rules that make it permanent

- Hand off the outcome, not the method. If you script their steps, you've built a $10/hour puppet, and you're still the operator.
- Hand over one decision authority with every task. That is what makes it permanent.
- Check weekly on decisions made, never on tasks done.

THE FOUR SYSTEMS

Hand these over whole. They are written to be run, not adapted.

SYSTEM 1

Inbox: the zero rules

The founder sees decisions. The owner sees traffic. These rules split the two:

- Two response targets: anything needing your decision, same day; everything else, 24 hours.
- Triage three times a day, never continuously. Notifications off.
- A living 'waiting on' list. Nothing sits unanswered without an owner and a date.
- You get copied only on decisions, never on discussions.
- Friday wipe: inbox at zero or every open thread has a next step and an owner.

SYSTEM 2

Calendar: the defense rules

Your calendar fills by default. These defaults fill it on purpose instead:

- Meetings are 25 or 50 minutes by default. The old 30 and 60 were never chosen.
- Two no-meeting blocks a week, 3 hours each, marked as busy. They move for nothing.
- No agenda in the invite, no meeting. The owner can demand one on your behalf.
- 15-minute buffers after anything decision-heavy.
- Once a month the owner brings you meetings to kill. Killing them is praise-worthy.

SYSTEM 3

Follow-ups: the cadence

Deals and customers rot in 'I should check in'. A cadence means nobody has to remember:

- Every promise gets a date the moment it is made, logged where the owner lives.
- Leads: day 1, day 3, day 7, then a break-up email. Most deals die in silence, not in 'no'.
- Customers: a check-in at day 30 and day 90 that the owner drafts and you approve.
- One line per touch, logged. If it only happened in your head, it didn't happen.

SYSTEM 4

The weekly check-in: 30 minutes, decisions only

The meeting that replaces all the interruptions:

- Fixed agenda: this week's numbers, decisions needed, blockers, one improvement.
- The owner brings decisions, not updates. Your job is to choose, not to catch up.
- Every decision gets an owner and a date before the meeting ends.
- Tasks never appear on this agenda. Tasks live in the systems above.

THE 30-DAY PLAN

One layer at a time

Each week adds one layer. A layer only starts once the one before it runs for seven days without your help.

WEEK	HAND OFF	THE OWNER RUNS
Week 1	Inbox and calendar, your two biggest daily drains	Your inbox rules and meeting defaults (Systems 1 and 2)
Week 2	CRM updates and lead/customer follow-ups	The follow-up cadence you documented in week 1
Week 3	Invoicing, data entry, and the weekly report	A one-page runbook per task: steps, tools, deadlines
Week 4	The rest of your test result, one task at a time	The retro: what worked, what you take back, what scales

What this is worth

Founders who run this plan typically collect 10–15 hours a week by day 30. Pareto prices a founder's hour at $200 when it goes to sales, product, and growth. Ten hours a week is about $8,600 a month of CEO work back on the calendar.

WHAT TO BUDGET

What a DIY hire costs by region

Salary moves by region. These are the working norms the hiring world runs on, from the hiring-regions chapter of The Hire book:

Region	The norm
Latin America	From about $1,000/month full-time, working your time zone. Strong loyalty. Argentina adds a 13th salary (Aguinaldo), split between July and December.
Southeast Asia	The classic outsourcing hub; availability tightening. Budget a 13th-month salary at year end.
South Asia	Scrappy problem-solvers who thrive with structure. Set explicit deadlines and build in buffers.
Eastern Europe	Higher salaries, less arbitrage, deep ownership. Direct feedback lands better than flattery.

Wherever they're from: 20 days of paid time off is the norm. Pay on time or early through Wise, Payoneer, or PayPal, and cover the transfer fees. Late payment is the fastest way to lose a great hire.

Or skip the DIY route: a fully-trained Right Hand from Pareto runs $3,000 a month on the annual plan plus a one-time $3,000 placement fee, and there is no contract until you hire. The fee covers 40+ hours of AI-stack training, the tool subscriptions, and the match. Check it against your own test: at $200 an hour, every 15 hours a week you get back is about $13,000 a month of founder work. The founder whose test said 37 hours is looking at $31,820.

THE JOB POSTING TEMPLATE

Your Week 1 list, postable

Your shortlist is your first job description. To post it anywhere, use this skeleton; it is built to filter while it attracts:

- Title: "WANTED! The World's Most [Adjective] Remote [Right Hand]" (sets the bar and self-selects).
- First line, every posting: "When you apply, make sure the subject line is: 'I actually read the instructions.'" Wrong subject line, auto-archived.
- Include: who you are (personality-forward), five responsibilities written as end results, the exact salary (never a range), and the traits of people who thrive in the role.
- Always state the uncomfortable parts: quiet workspace, reliable internet, a 60-day trial period. The right people nod. The wrong ones filter themselves.
- Auto-reject: didn't follow the instructions, sloppy formatting, sarcastic answers. Archive, never delete.

GO DEEPER

Where this kit comes from

The hiring system in these pages is from The Hire: How to Attract, Hire, and Manage the Best Remote Talent in the World by Kasim Aslam and Ivan Bunin, the team behind Pareto Talent. The book's site gives the templates away for free: the job posting, the trial-project offer, the contractor agreement, the rejection letter, and the one-page cheat sheet. Grab them at thehirebook.com.

THE FIRST 90 DAYS

Keep the person you hired

Onboarding is a launch sequence: habits, expectations, and momentum are set here.

- Paper them up. A simple contractor agreement, walked through section by section in a call. Transparency builds trust.
- Set the pace. Assign slightly more work than fits an 8-hour day, say so out loud, and hand over your real backlog, never busywork.
- Pay on time or early through Wise, Payoneer, or PayPal, and cover the transfer fees.
- Daily short check-ins until confidence is established, then two weekly meetings.
- Celebrate the 60-day trial loudly. It is nerve-wracking by design; passing it deserves a moment.

THE 2-6-2 RULE

How the assistant job becomes a Right Hand

Kasim Aslam's standard: hand your assistant ten tasks. Two they will do worse than you. Six they will do just as well. Two they will do better than you ever did. Management orthodoxy says fix the bottom two. That is backwards: remove the bottom two and make the top two their whole job.

His proof: one executive assistant became his social director, another his automation director, and a third, Ivan Bunin, became his CTO, then his business partner.

That trajectory is the idea behind a Right Hand: someone AI-trained who starts on your Week 1 list and grows into the work only they can do.

BEFORE YOU GO

The three moves, in order

- Fill in page 1. Your two Week 1 handoffs and your recoverable hours, written down while the test result is fresh.
- Run the script on handoff one this week. Outcome, not method. One decision handed over with it.
- When the test finds 10+ hours, book the Matching Call and bring this kit. Your Week 1 list is the interview.

Systems make delegation work. A person makes it scale.

This kit removes the excuse of 'nobody can do it like me'. What it can't do is be there at 8am Monday, running your inbox, your calendar, and your follow-ups so well that you forget they exist. That job is a Right Hand: hand-picked, AI-trained, matched to your task list within 24 hours, backed by Freedom 40 (reclaim 40 hours in your first 30 days or the next month is free) and lifetime replacement.

Book your Matching Call at paretotalent.com and bring this kit. Your Week 1 list is your first job description.
